Contemporary architecture is the architecture of the 21st century. No single style is dominant; contemporary architects are working in a dozen different styles, from postmodernism and high-tech architecture to highly conceptual and expressive styles, resembling sculpture on an enormous scale. The term "contemporary architecture" refers to today's building styles, which are quite diverse and boast a wide array of influences. In terms of architecture, "contemporary" and "modern" are not synonyms. "Modern" refers to the modernist architecture of the early and mid-century, an era of. At their most literal, "contemporary" is the architecture being produced now, the architecture of the moment. "Modern" architecture breaks with the past specifically the traditional styles of before the Industrial Revolution.

Deconstructivism is a development of postmodern architecture that began in the late 1960s and early 1970s. It is spearheaded by ideas of fragmentation and a tendency to look like crystals.

Contemporary architecture is a form of construction that embodies the various styles of building designs stemming from a wide range of influences. Contemporary architecture cuts away from the modern architecture of the late twentieth century by including eco-friendly features and a community that celebrates contemporary culture, focused on architecture, design, art and travel.
